Pertinent Paragraphs

Early this week a particularly dumb aviator endeavored to give local residents a thrill by swooping over the city at an altitude practically nil. Several cases of near-heartfailure were reported—and that's about as close as our daring young friend came to entertaining the populace. Incorporated towns are able to protect themselves against this brand of foolishness. All we can do is appeal to the judgment of airmen—and the flyer who zooms over housetops advertises a startling lack of that quality. So it looks like we've cried the blues in vain, no?

The grand jury in the Santa Clara county liquor investigation found "laxity of public officials." Seems like a lot of time and money was expended to arrive at this conclusion—but money well spent at that.

Joe Robinson, Democratic candidate for vice president, says the Democrats are not afraid of losing the Solid South but he is impressing upon them that if southern Democrats do not stop declaring for Hoover the Solid South will be shot to pieces.

The Tammany candidate for president, Alfred E. Smith, says business is so bad the country is going to the dogs. Alfred P. Sloan, jr., president of General Motors, where John Raskob used to work, says business is prosperous. Governor Smith is a politician. Mr. Sloan is a producer.

Alarmed by the human appeal Herbert Hoover is making to the people, Democrats are charging that in 1924 the Republicans nominated an ice box and in 1928 an adding machine. That's all right, but add to it that the ice box has had milk, butter, eggs and nourishing food in it every day since, and that from 1929 on, under Hoover, the adding machine will be kept busy totaling increased wages of working people, who, without any assistance, can in contrast see all the horrors of Democratic competitive tariff.

Six speeches for Hoover by Charles E. Hughes. There is a real contribution to the campaign, for that gentleman can do a fine job with words when he starts.

As to the election of Herbert Hoover, there is nothing to it now but the shouting. But a word to the wise: eep up the enthusiasm, and the work too. Take nothing for granted.

Strange, isn't it, that Al Smith is not referring to the days on the East Side in New York, the hard luck days he used to sell by the boatload? Those days are gone forever, after the way he has got himself tied up with the "moneyed mob," as he used to call 'em.

Our little column of odds and ends is a bit brief this week, due not to the fact that our brain refused to function, but rather to the fact that we have been very busy getting our new press in order. Yeah, this issue of the Press was turned out on the new machine. Come in and look it over sometime.

That's all.

Joe Bennett To Orate At Paly

The Campbell iwanis club has been very fortunate in having a number of interesting talks of late given by members who spent their summer vacations traveling over the good old U. S. A. One of the best was given last Tuesday by Mark Purmort, king of the poultryrealm, who drove his bus thousands of miles when he wasn't fixing punctures) through sandy deserts and over lofty peaks. Mark, in his usual humorous manner, gave a detailed account of many places visited. His talk was greatly enjoyed by those members present.

President Walt Merrill and others urged a good attendance at the district meeting to be held in Palo Alto today, Oct. 12. The meeting will be especially interesting on account of the oratorical contest among the various clubs. Campbell's entrfy is none other than our own Joe Bennett—we feel sure of the prize.
merit was provided by Chairman

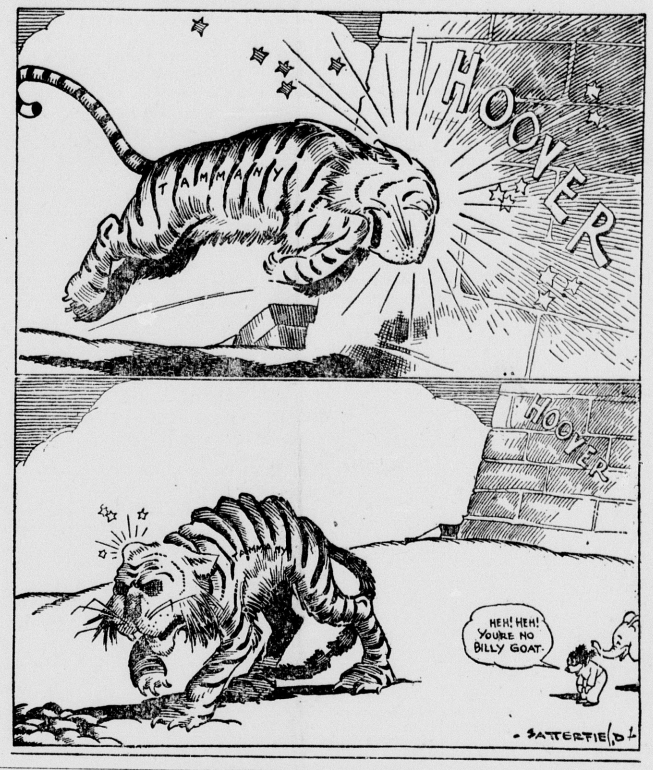
A musical program of unusual Mark. Miss Margaret Pardee sang three very delightful solos, accompanied at the piano by Miss atherine Wood.

Dr. Richards of San Jose will be the speaker at next week's meeting. His subject will be "X-rays." Ira Abbott will be chairman.

Union To Meet

The Woman's Christian Temperence Union will meet Wednesday, Oct. 17, at 2:30 p. m., with Mrs. A. J Farley at 125 North First street

The Stone Wall



Grange Food Sale

The ladies of the Grange are having a food sale this Saturday, Oct. 13, at Field's Store. All members are requested to have their contributions ready on that day. The public is invited to attend and select their Sunday dinner from the stock of home-cooked foods that will be on display. The proceeds of the sale will go into the Grange building fund.

The Women's Guild of the Congregational church is making plans for a food sale to be held at Miller's Store aSturday, Oct. 20.

White Shrine Club Luncheon Guests

One of the largest gatherings of the White Shrine Service club ever held met for an all-day session at the home of Mrs. George Parso on Hamilton avenue Wednesday.
A delicious luncheon was served at 1:30, each member contributing a dish of some kind.

In the afternoon a business meeting was held with Mrs. Mabel Cornell, president, presiding, and Mrs. Blanche Wheeler, secretary, in her chair. Reports were made and plans formed for work of this most worthy cause—service. The ladies in this club are deserving of a great deal of credit for the splendid work they are doing.

Miss Abinante Wins

Miss Rose Abinante of this city Tuesday morning qualified for the finals in the state contest being held for the purpose of determining the possessors of the best "radio voices."

Miss Abinante is studying under Leda Gregory Jackson of San Jose.

State winners will compete in the national audition to be held in New York Nov. 12 for cash prizes totaling $17,500.

Barletts Home

Mr. and Mrs. Barlet, who had been in Australia for several months returned from Sydney last week and report a delightful voyage both ways.

At present they are putting on an act in one of the vaudeville houses in San Francisco. They were here this week moving into their house on Campbell avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. George Miller and family of Fair Oaks, Cal., were week-end guests at the home of his brother, L. S. Miller. Mr. and Mrs L Cleveland of Modesto were also guests at the Miller and Shadle homes

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Scholes of San Fernando who are on an extended tour of northern California were recent visitors at the Miller and Shadle homes.

Wayne Saunders is recovering from severe burns on his hands and arms, sustained recently as a result of the explosion of an acetylene torch.

Friends of Miss Ruth Grandyman will be pleased to learn that she has recovered from her recent illness.

Women Workers Back Hoover For a Full Week's Wages

Women's Trade Union Leader Declares He Alone Can Prevent Lowering of Living Standards Throughout the Nation.

By Alice Fox Pitts

Whether or not the average American wage-earner can take home a full week's pay envelope every Saturday night in the next four years depends on the election of Herbert Hoover, according to Mrs. Raymond Robins, who will spend several weeks at Republican National headquarters directing campaign activities among industrial women of the nation.

Mrs. Robins was president of the National Women's Trade Union League for fifteen years, president of the International Congress of Working Women for six years, and also served on the committee on education of the American Federation of Labor.

The abolition of poverty has always been the hope of dreamers but never before, Mrs. Robins points out, has a practical statesman set out to prove how, to a very large measure, that idealistic state can be attained. As Secretary of Commerce, Herbert Hoover has stimulated our foreign trade. Commissioners have gone abroad with samples of goods and brought back orders. This has meant more work for our factories, more jobs for our men and women. By showing manufacturers how to eliminate waste in production, he has put their business on a sounder basis, once more increasing the wage-earner's chance of getting a job and keeping it.

Since one woman in every five in this country works, Hoover's activities affect millions of women directly in this way. People as a whole do not realize the extent to which women are employed in factories today, Mrs. Robins says. When carpentry was done by hand, women could not engage in that occupation because they did not have the physical strength for it. Now doors, window sills and other parts of houses are turned out by machinery, and such machines are run by women. The same is true of many other occupations.

To these factory women, the election of Herbert Hoover is of prime importance, for it means the preservation of their jobs, according to Mrs. Robins. They must vote for him to prevent their standards of living being lowered to European levels. That is the argument Mrs. Robins will have her workers hammer home.

Chamber of Commerce Host to Consolidated

The local chamber of commerce members were unanimous in voicing their approval of the federal radio commission's action in placing QW as an agricultural broadcast to keep producers posted on the various commodities at a meeting this week in Community hall with H. C. Smith presiding.

C. H. Whitman, chairman and spokesman of a committee composed of Horace Lea and Victor Holmes on ways and means of purchasing and operating electric signs at the approach of East and West Campbell avenue into Campbell, gave a very interesting report and outline of signs they had inspected, made by the Rainbow Color Sign company of Chicago One was described as being eight feet long by three feet wide and double faced, lighted inside with a continual motion producing a colored and attractive sign, with Campbell in large, distinct letters, lighted up with the rainbow hues.

After much discussion in favor of such electric signs, President Smith appointed J. F. Wehmeyer and Ralph Hyde to co-operate with the present committee and see what steps can be taken for the installation of signs at a nominal price.

The County Consolidated will meet at Campbell Tuesday, Nov. 13.

Mrs. Mary Lamphear, chairman of the membership committee, urged all members to pay their dues immediately.

The meeting was adjourned until the second Monday in November.

Grange Hears of Amendments

The Grange was well attended Tuesday evening, nearly 100 members being present. W. H. Crothers spoke on some of the ammendments to be voted on at the November election, calling special attention to the national reapportionment measure wich is number one on the ballot. Every voter in the country should vote yes on number one, otherwise the whole government of the state will be in the hands of two or three of our large cities, and the farmer and the country home owner will be left out in the cold with a constantly increasing tax burden confronting him.

It was expected that Senator Jones would be present to talk on the measures to be voted on at the coming election. The Senator was unable to attend but his place was ably filled by Franklin Hichborn.

Speaking of the referendum Mr. Hichborn said some people objected to it because there were so many different laws put up to the people to vote on. This is not the fault of the referendum. There are only two referendums on the ballot and two initiative measures. The other 17 are all put on by the legislature. Whether this is good or bad depends on how we take it. It at least gives those who know what they want an opportunity to express themselves. The referendum is the best thing the people of this country ever had.

Campbell Power Plant Enlarged

The Pacific Gas & Electric company engineers have completed surveys and estimates of the past, present and future growth of this section of the Santa Clara valley, announced plans for the erection of an enlarged electric substation in this vicinity from which service will be available.

J. D. Kuster, division manager of the company states:

"According to the program, new feeders will bring additional energy into the new Campbell substation and four new transformers of aproximately 16,000 horsepower capacity will make energy available over secondary lines to serve consumers throughout the territory. The plant will involve an expenditure of $147,000 and provide additional service for Campbell, Almaden and the Los Gatos-Saratoga areas."

Miss Evans at Rest

The funeral of Miss Marion B. Evans took place at the Melvin Funeral Home at Los Gatos Tuesday morning and interment was made in Los Gatos cemetery.

The death of Miss Evans, who was 72 years of age, the last five years of which were spent in Campbell, occured in a Los Gatos sanitarium after an illness of several weeks.

The Rev. J. H. Bennett of the Campbell Congregational church conducted the last rites. Pall bearers were M. A. Ross, H. B. Archibald, H. S Young, F S Newcomb, Dr. W. I. Merrill and William Woodbury.

Mrs. Ethel Ricketts and Mrs. Helen Jones sang "This is the End of a Perfect Life" and "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere."

A resident of California for 25 years past, Miss Evans is survived by her sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Sparrell of Campbell and a nephew, H. F. Evans, also of Campbell.

Gram School Faculty Honored

The Campbell Union Grammar School P. T. A. honored the teachers of that institution Friday evening at a reception.

The evening's entertainment opened with the singing of the P. T. A. song and an address of welcome by Mrs. A. D. Rice, president of the club.

Drill by the junior drum corps of the Mercury-Herald was a feature of the program Mr. Muntz was in charge of the corps. Two piano solos were rendered by Miss atherine Wood. An address was delivered by I. R. Abbott, principal of the school, being followed by the introduction of the teachers by Mrs. S. N. Hedegard. Dr. W. I. Merrill, representing the school board, spoke briefly

The balance of the evening was passed socially, refreshments being served in the cafeteria.

Guests of honor were I. R. Abbott, Miss Mary Fablinger, Miss Honcie Naylor, Miss Ora Jasper, Miss Helen Neilson, Mrs. Maud Sourisseau, Miss Dorothy Merriman, Mrs. eBrnice Saveker, Mrs. Marion Plumm, Mrs. Frances Swayne, Mrs. Mable Davidson, Miss Jeanne Turner, Miss Adele Grandeman, Miss athryn Sevy, Miss Edythe Bell, Miss Mildred Sloan, Miss Ruth Stuart, Miss Emma Wilson, Miss Margaret Singleton, Miss atherine Wood, Miss Margaret Dean, Miss Rowena Farman, J. L. Snell and Mr. Thelke.

State Park Bonds

W. P. Isham, president of the Semperviren's club, will talk to the Country Woman's club Monday afternoon, Oct. 15 at 3 o'clock. The subject of his address will be "The State Bond Issue for Parks."

It is to be an open meeting of the club and all are cordially invited to attend. It is hoped a large gathering will be present.

CHAPTER I

The orchestra at the large, new Granada dance hall had reached that stage when the individual members composing it were rather beginning to enjoy their own exertions. There was a pause. A man with a mega phone bounded the platform.

"When yer all alone," he began determinedly, "by da telephone, 'n dere's no one dere but youoooooo—"

Most of those composing the large crowd of dancers who had stopped and crowded around the platform to listen to the singer eyed him rather cynically, not, apparently, in the least touched by the poignant words of the popular song of the moment.

One little girl watched the fat singer as though the words of his song were affecting her. She turned to her male companion, a slim youth with glazed hair. She put a small, cool hand into one of his.

"It would be terrible, wouldn't it," she asserted rather than asked, "to be really all alone, especially after you'd loved some one?"

The young man grinned down at her reassuringly.

"Try and get rid of me," he said airily.

"And will be married very soon now?" she went on wistfully, talking to make herself not so clearly hear the words of the song.

"Inside of six months." His eyes did not meet hers as he replied and he shifted his position slightly. The girl glanced down at the diamond ring upon the fourth finger of her left hand. It sparkled up at her bravely, as it caught and held a concentrated reflection from the multicolored lights in the immense room.

"Good Lord, how much longer is that guy going to sing?" the young man shot out impatiently; "it's nearly one o'clock; only a couple more dances to come."

"There! He's finished now," said Lolita. Almost before the words were out of her mouth the orchestra had started and she was whirled instantly away to become a part of the swirling, hopping prancing mass upon the large floor. It proved, however, to be the last dance, for presently the popular strains changed to the old familiar tune of "Home, Sweet Home," jazzily syncopated. Very few, however, stopped to finish the dance. There was a mad rush for the cloak rooms.

Lolita found a place before one of the long mirrors in the "Ladies' Room," and started to adjust her hat, tucking her short red curls carelessly under the brim.

The glass told her that she was very pretty, especially as compared to the other girls who stood about the room making ready to meet their men. She was not, however, quite happy. A little fear tugged at her heart and would not be dispelled. The song had somehow started it.

She was twenty-two years old and markedly different from most of the other girls in the room. She was the only child of an exceedingly expert, but exceedingly underpaid watchmaker who worked in one of the large watch factories in Elgin. He had managed to put her through the Elgin grammar schools and the high school, and even a six months's business college course. He had wanted somehow to send her on to college, but she would not hear of it, but had insisted upon goin, to Chicago to find a position, so that she might be an asset rather than a liability to him. Shortly after coming to Chicago she had found the position and become engaged.

She had written glowing accounts of her fiance to her father, and he had replied warmly.

Harvey Torrence had met Lolita at the department store where she worked. He was eight years her senior, a slightly blase product of the city, making excellent money as a real estate salesman, and having no particular intentions of being deliberately captious. But he had wanted Lolita the moment that ever he laid eyes upon her, and he had somehow managed to "sell" himself to her. Although the according of him, on his own terms, had caused Lolita many a frightened hour alone with herself in a little hall bedroom, her loneliness a desire for sympathetic companionship had overcome a very staunch set of scruples, and she had yielded to him. Having yielded she would willingly have laid down her very life for him had he asked her to do so, and she waited with what patience she could summon for that day when a remarkably dilatory judge should grant him a divorce from a former wife who had hitherto failed to understand him."

"It just about a month, now I ought to get my decree," he had told her at first six months ago. Month after month had passed, and no decree had been forthcoming. However, Lolita loved him, and she was sure that where such a great, warm feeling of love inside of her existed nothing could possibly be wrong.

After the first few hours of mental clashing when the ideals which her mother, who had died when Lolita was thirteen, had instilled into her, and her father's franker explanations of the philosophy of living, had met with Harvey's more facile philosophy, she had stopped worrying, closed part of her mind, and given the rest to Harvey to manipulate as he saw fit.

She turned from the mirror, about to go, when a girl who had been working at the Emporium at the time she had met Harvey, and who had left shortly after that, walked up to her.

"Hello, Lolita!" she said carelessly, "how's the kid? Still plugging along down at the Emporium?"

"Yes, but I'm to be married shortly.

"You're going to be married. What the devil are you going to do that for?"

"Because I'm in love."

"Well, that's about the surest way I know of to get out of love. Graduate from nine hours a day at the Emporium to twenty-four-hour duty in a flat—I thought you had more brains than that."

Lolita turned to go, with a conciliatory smile; vaguely she could understand why a girl who had made "other arrangements," should speak disparagingly of marriage. The other, however, held her with a question.

"Who you engaged to? Anybody I know?"

"Well, I think you had seen him call for me at the store once or twice."

"You don't mean Harvey Torrence?"

"Yes."

"Oh! my G—d!" the girl let out a raucous laugh which caused others in the room to turn. "Oh! my G—d!" she repeated and laughed again. "Harvey Torrence. Engaged to him! You make me laugh. That's all you ever will be—just 'engaged' to him; that's his regular game. I was engaged to him once myself."

"We are going to be married," said Lolita stiffly, "just as soon as Harvey can get his divorce." This time the girl did not laugh. She turned suddenly, almost fiercely, and grasped the other by both arms.

"Listen, kid; you're not like the rest of us. You've got a break. You look different. Anybody would know you was innocent. You got a good chance yet. Don't pay any attention to what I said about that marriage stuff. I only laugh at it because I can't have it ever, and I know it; but you you're O. K. Stay that way. Let me tell you something, hot off the pan Harvey Torrence has never been married in his life. Don't let him kid you with engagement stuff—or has he already kidded you?" She stopped and looked searchingly into the other girl's eyes. "So that's how it is," she said disappointedly after a minute. "Oh well; you'll have to do the best you can, then; but honestly, you don't look it. You look just as innocent as you ever did. Better grab off some bird while you've got the chance, and for heaven's sake lay off of Harvey. Married! H—ll! He wouldn't marry unless he could cop out somebody with dough, and lots of it. Married—huh!" She laughed again shrilly.

It was a happy laugh, as though her belief in herself had somehow been strengthened by the knowledge of the other's condition in life.

Lolita had been listening helplessly. She felt as though she could never possibly leave the room, horrid as it had now become, with its smell of cheap cosmetics, its grotesque sights.

Girls, exposing their bosoms to be powdered, other girls pulling their clothes up to arrange their garters, utterly oblivious to the vulgarity of display. Girls telling each other filthy anecdotes; accusing each other of intended indiscretions . . . laughing in maudlin abandon at unmentionable things.

Heretofore she had not minded it, but now, suddenly, she felt irresistibly a part of them, drawn to them by a sinister bond never to be severed. She turned and walked from the room, out into the now deserted dance hall, with untidy streamers of confetti about the floor, the dimmed lights making it seem like some huge, malign cavern. What the girl had said was not true she told herself as she walked toward the door. She passed into the night air, and the crash of traffic upon Florence avenue; turned toward the place where Harvey had parked his neat roadster when they had arrived several hours before. He was sitting in the driver's seat smoking a cigarette. Calmly she climbed in beside him. Without even looking at her he automatically went through the motions of starting the car. They drove for a time in silence. Lolita could see that there was a bright moon hanging over the lake. Suddenly without any very definite idea she said to him:

"Turn down one of the cross streets to the lake; I want to talk to you for awhile before we go home." He turned and looked at her in protest his lips framing the words "it's late." But, something about her manner caused him to turn and run a block east to the water's edge and stop. The moon made a pathway of gold directly to the car, leading off across the dark silent waters into a blue-black oblivion which somehow heartened Lolita. She had to force herself to speak calmly, fighting down the terrifying pain at her heart.

"Harvey," she said, in calm, level tones; "you have never been married." He swung about to face her angrily, but something in her direct gaze cowed him. Almost visibly he fortified himself to bluff things out.

"I suppose somebody's been talking to you about me; well, what of it? I love you, and you love me; what difference does the rest make? Kiss me, and forget about what you've been hearing." He reached for her, but she moved as far away from him as possible, to the farthest corner of the seat.

"I can spend the night with a girl from the store who lives in the Grantham apartments; tomorrow I'll not go to the store, I'll find another room somewhere. Will you take me over to the Grantham, or shall I get out now and walk?"

"Say! What's come over you? Suppose I'm not married; what of it? I haven't been stringing you along all this time. I've really loved you. I've always intended to come clean with you; only I just wanted to wait and be sure. I'll marry you."

"Thanks, very much," she said bitterly, "but I don't want the honor now."

"You was keen about it as late as two or three hours back; what's come over you?"

"Why did you keep telling me that lie about getting a divorce? Why did you lie and lie and lie? Oh! Harvey, it makes it all seem so small and cheap and tawdry; why I'd even rather have had you come to me at first and have told me the truth, that it was only passion, not the sort of thing you led me to believe it was that prompted you to—"

"But listen, I'm telling you I'll marry you, now—tomorrow—first thing in the morning. On the square, I'm not kidding now at all. Honest, Lolita. I've always been crazy about you; only—well—I thought maybe we might not get along as well as I expected and I made up my mind to sort of try things out for awhile. Aw, come on, kid, try to get me straight; we've been such good pals. Don't spoil everything now." She was near to the breaking point. Most maddening, most heartbreaking was the fact that he could not see, could not at all understand what she felt, and there was no way to put it into words. Nevertheless, she tried despairingly.

"Harvey, you lied to me from the start. You've lied to me every day we've been together. If you lied about one thing, there is no telling about how many other things you lied. I can't stand it—all of the beautiful things that have passed between us—and it's all been nothing but comic opera from the start. Will you take me to the Grantham, or shall I 'get out and walk?'"

"Oh h—l," he said, disgustedly, and started the car. It was but a matter of a few blocks. He stopped the car without a word before the door and she got out immediately.

"Aren't you going to kiss me goodby, kid?" he asked her in halting tones, tinged with real emotion. She stopped, looked at him for a moment, her eyes blinded by tears, and in that moment, for the first time she saw him comically distorted; saw the loudness of his check suit; the assertiveness of his tie, the angle at which his gray fedora hat was pitched, the way the cigarette hung limply from his under lip, the cheap good looks of his weak face; it was as though a mirror had been held up before her and she were somehow seeing herself. Without a word she turned and fled into the foyer.

PICTORIAL LIFE OF HERBERT HOOVER

No. 5 By Satterfield

1. A short time after Herbert Hoover's mother in 1931, he went to live with his grandparents in Cedar Rapids, Ia.

2. He was now ten years of age—old enough to assume an important share in all manner of farm work.

3. In winter Herbert and his cousin rode on horseback to school two miles away.

4. The future engineer constructed a mowing machine out of an old cross-cut saw, using a heifer for power.

Convenience urges an Extension Telephone

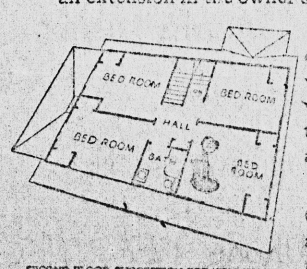
Just as you appreciate running water in more than one room in the house, so you would appreciate an extension telephone. Its cost is only a few cents a day; its convenience is great, and sometimes it is even a factor in guarding the safety of your household.

FIRST FLOOR SUGGESTION FOR TELEPHONE

This home of two stories has its main telephone in the dining room and an extension in the owner's bedroom.



SECOND FLOOR SUGGESTION FOR TELEPHONE

An extension in the owner's bedroom is convenient for the housewife by day, and makes the telephone readily available by night.

The cost is very small. Call our business office and say "I want an extension telephone."

Come and hear this lecture. No admission and no collection.

Very Little Service, No Insurance

J. J. Deuel, head of the law and utilities department of the California farm bureau federation has been studying the contracts of automobile service associations of this state and has come to the conclusion that membership in them is not worth what it costs.

Salesmen may be plausible and promise lots of things, but the contract which the member signs does not offer him much for his money. All of the organizations studied are associations, and as such are not under the eye of the corporation commissioner.

He further finds that none of them have licenses as agent or broker to sell insurance, so they do not come under the insurance tract between the individual and an unregulated unsupervised private association.

Apparently most people who commissioner. Thus it is a consurance. Mr. Deuel tells of the case of a Stanislaus farmer who believe they are buying cheap inpurchase these "service contracts" had a wreck and thought himself protected by his membership in one of these associations. It proved to be another case of not reading the contract. On the line below his signature it was expressly stated, "This is not an application for insurance."

A little close reading will also indicate in many cases that it is not an application for much service, for little or no service is promised in the signed contract. Some of the contracts which profess to furnish free towing service really obligate the association to only one hour of such service during the contract. The usual instruction to the member is to have himself towed to the nearest garage and pay the charges and send the bill to the association. In a number of instances the member who sends in the bill is ignored completely.

It should be understood that the above facts are not meant to apply to established, responsible automobile clubs such as the National Automobile club, California Automobile association and the Automobile Club of Southern California. Nor do they apply to the Farmers' Automobile Inter-Insurance exchange and the State Farm Mutual Auto Insurance company of Bloomington, Ill., and the many old line insurance companies which sell actual insurance and give with it the service which is customary in adjusting claims, etc.

Mr. Deuel finds that some confusion has resulted from the fact that there are two concerns in the field using the letters A. A. A. The A. A. A., as applied to the American Automobile Association is a long-established institution giving national service. This is sold by the California Automobile association. The other concern using the same initials is a local concern. Naturally, this would lead to some confusion.

Straight Insurance for Farmers in Their Own Company

The lower risk (traffic hazard) of rural communities and each policy holder being a member of the company accounts for much of our saving in costs.

Then all Farmer's Automombile Inter-Insurance Exchange policies are simple and understandable. We have no Limited Clauses, no Deduction Clauses—a policy plainly worded with no coined phrases or hidden meanings—a policy that insures and does not disappoint.

Our agents are men of integrity, men to whom you can witheonfidence tell and discuss your insurance problems on a plain, business basis. Much of the remarkable success of this organization has come from the realization by California farmers that they can economically and to their own profit be their own insurance company.

Regardless of when your present policy expires, plan now to renew it in your own company.

Property owners in Campbell, Los Gatos are eligible for this insurance.
